

MAN AND APE ARE LINKED ONCE MORE

Disciple of Darwin Reiterates Statements of Latter and Explains Further the Descent of Man.

(Special Cable to Review.)
By Walter Dunkirk.

BERLIN, July 13.—"The Problem of Man" was the subject of a lecture by the celebrated Professor Haeckel, of Jena University, who is a follower of Darwin. He had the platform decorated with skeletons of men and apes from the University Museum, to illustrate his theory of the descent of man.

"Darwin" said Professor Haeckel, "was the man who established for all time the morphological relationship of men and apes. It is not to be understood, however, by relationship that man has descended from some existing type of ape, but rather that he and the existing anthropoids have one common ancestor—perhaps in the remote tertiary period—that this ancestor was descended from a still more remote 'half-ape' which in turn descended from some insect-eating beast of mammal affinity.

"This line of descent is now accepted by scientists with greater certainty than any theory about the descent of the elephant or the whale, for the religious or philosophical consequences of such a theory, it is immaterial whether man's origin is found in the region of apes or that of any species order of mammalia; for example, the sheep, as Professor Virchow once sarcastically suggested. However our pride may rebel against this theory of descent, it remains a fact that no group of animals approaches nearer to man than the apes.

"Those who are opposed to this theory lay stress on man's consciousness of good and evil, his sympathies, his nobler feelings, and his genius; but although these objections have my entire sympathy there would be more intellectual pleasure among men on this subject, if they freed themselves from the blinding influence of traditional prejudices; and if they recognized in their lowly origin the best evidence of their brilliant faculties and in their progressive past a reasonable ground for belief that their future will lead them to still loftier heights."

One of the wealthiest and bluest-blooded of German aristocrats is now a monk in the Dominican monastery at Yendo, a "haunt of ancient peace" near the Dutch frontier. This is Prince Carl von Lowenstein-Wertheim-Rochefort, who has renounced the vanities of the world for the holy calm of convent life.

Prince Carl, who has reached an advanced age, is head of the Catholic branch of the family, and derived an income of $750,000 a year from real estate scattered all over Germany. But he has a devout unworshipful soul, which has led him to seek peace in the church, and to give $750,000 of his fortune as a donation to the church funds.

The Prince for ten years carried on a vigorous campaign against duelling, and was leader of the Anti-Duelling League. Three rulers of Germany states—The King of Saxony and Wurtemberg and the Grand Duke of Hesse—he had converted recognition of the duelling system, but he could never win the support of the Kaiser, whose tacit opposition is said to have been the cause of his retiring from the world.

Another story as to the reason of his renouncing the world is that he was in love with a beautiful woman of humble birth, and was in despair because he could never make her wife.

By the Kaiser's order, all ladies attending the Royal Opera House must appear in décolleté gowns, as at Covent Garden. Wilhelm II is determined to have a brilliant audience at the opera, but his edict has been received without enthusiasm by the Berlin society women.

These are perhaps less like society women as known in New York and London, than the upper class women of any European capital; they are in fact too domesticated to be "smart." Their reputation outside for the opera is a dreary blouse and skirt with an attractive hat. They would never think of baring their shoulders except at a ball or a court ceremony.

The Kaiserin is responsible for a good deal of the dowdiness of the women of Berlin. Any attempt at brilliance meets with her disapproval and she is especially severe on any lady of the court who appears in a gown too decidedly décolleté.

Another vanity her majesty abhors is any advertising oneself in the papers. She will not have any of her circle permit themselves to be admired in print, or their photographs to be published. "It is too much like the vulgar ways of English and American women!" says she.

The result is that the Berlin court is quite the least brilliant in Europe, the Kaiserin having succeeded in making every woman aim, not at social eclat, but at the idea she follows herself. "Kinder, Kirche und Kochen," (children, church and cooking.)

A request has just been presented to the German government for the payment of a sum of 10,000,000 francs to the descendants of a Russian statesman, Field Marshal Count Munich. Among the claimants are the members of two well known French families.

The field marshal who was a courier of Philip the Great, was presented by that monarch with an estate in recognition of his having concluded an advantageous treaty with Russia. The count did not accept the estate and it was transferred to Frederick with the consent of Empress Anne of Russia to the count's son.

Later the latter obtained from King Frederick William the written promise of payment of three hundred and twelve thousand thalers. It is this sum which the heirs are claiming with interest since 1741.

The descendants of the granddaughters of the field marshal (his grandson died unmarried) are in France on the one hand and the Counts d'Altonville, and on the other hand, Mme. David Noicken, wife of the well known dress maker, who trades under the name of Beckoff-David. This lady's maiden name was Baronne de Noicken, and she is a descendant of Axel-Gustave, Baron de Noicken, who in 1767 married a countess de Munich, direct heir of the old field marshal.

Prince Radolin, German ambassador in Paris has replied adversely on the question of the estate, but does not dispute the money.

The town council of Berlin has just decided to honor the memory of the great dramatist Ibsen by naming one of the streets of the capital after him. Their decision has, however, been vetoed by the Superior council, who did not love Ibsen.

It was only last year that the Norwegian dramatist's books were ousted from the municipal libraries. It is also not long ago that the municipality was forbidden to give the name of Gerhard Hauptmann to another street in the capital, the German dramatist not being looked upon with favor by the Kaiser.

SURE ENOUGH DEVIL TREE.

Inherited a Legacy of Witches from the Man Who Planted it.

The tree of Tula and the tree of the San Night are known throughout the world, but there is a tree in Mexico which acquired a local reputation somewhat shady in character, says a writer in Modern Mexico.

El Arbol Malidito is said to have been planted by a gentleman, who had the misfortune to be swallowed up by Mother Earth on account of his crimes. He was known throughout the country as an hombre muy malo. He never went to mass, never confessed his sins nor did he have the image of a saint in his house, wear a rosary and his neck, or make a sign of the cross as a respectable man should. He never gave a beggar even a centavito and when he met a padrecito on the street he did not deign to remove his hat.

Now it was rumored that this gentleman was responsible for many murders and atrocious crimes of every description, but he was never confined in jail, because it was known that he had a compact with the devil, so that whenever he invoked his majesty he was rendered invisible to the human eye or at least so small that he could easily escape. He was shunned by all and he had neither friends nor relatives.

But a peculiar thing about this man was that he loved the trees, the birds and all the animals. He planted a great many trees and fed a flock of birds every morning.

It was many years ago that the event of his departure took place, but it is still remembered by the ancient inhabitants of the neighborhood. Everyone of the Hacienda ranch had attended the religious services of the morning and they were returning to their homes when a terrific noise was heard.

They rushed to the street where it came from and there they saw how the earth had opened up under the feet of the hombre muy malo. He was enveloped by thick flames and smoke and quickly disappeared beneath the surface of the earth.

This was considered a just punishment in view of the situation and everyone was exceedingly pleased. While the faithful had been attending the services of the church the cursed one had nothing else to do but place a burning cigarette between the lips of an image on a big crucifix carried by an altar on the street. It was then that the convenient cavity opened up and he was engulfed by the earth. That very day all the trees which he had planted except El Arbol Malidito, dried up and died—and so did the birds which he had fed from his own hands. An attempt was made to cut down the tree that did not dry up but the foolish man who made the attempt dropped dead on stepping under the shadow of the foliage. As no one had the temerity to approach and remove the man's body had to be left there to be eaten by the crows.

Since that day many have met tragic death under that tree. A pedestrian who went under it for shade on a summer day was bitten by a snake and

SEVEN BLUE DISKS FLOAT AROUND SUN

A Strange Sight Beheld by Phoenix Officer and His Wife.

PHOENIX, July 12.—Clerk W. E. Thomas of the board of supervisors is curious to know how many persons, if any, saw what he saw on Sunday evening. It is either a phenomenon or what is still stranger, something that may be called a co-incidental optical illusion for two persons saw it.

About an hour before sundown happening to look in the direction of the sun he was further attracted by its singular blood red appearance. He next noticed a blue disk floating in the heavens apparently close to the sun and next it floated in front of it completely obscuring it. Then he saw another disk and then another until there were seven of them. He naturally believed that something was wrong with his vision and called Mrs. Thomas who came to his side. He asked her if she saw anything unusual about the sun. She first observed its redness and then she said she saw a blue spot as big as the sun. She soon saw others until there were seven.

The disks were constantly in motion and they were in a straight line moving upward apparently beside the sun. Then they divided and some of them moved in a horizontal line, some above and the rest below the sun. They changed directions; at times a disk would move across the face of the sun and another would seemingly go behind it.

As the disks were going through these heavenly evolutions, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas verbally compared the results of their observations and they invariably agreed as to the movement of the disks. The comparison proved that the fact did not rest on the eye. At the same time it could not be supposed that the disks actually existed where they were supposed to be for at that distance no movement could have been rapid enough to have been observable. There was plainly some condition in the air which gave the disks their appearance. Directly on a line between the porch of the Thomas residence and the setting sun was the Slocum ranch still sending up a slight haze from the fire of the afternoon. Yet the haze was not sufficient to perceptibly interfere with a view of the sun though it probably gave it its blood red appearance.

This show continued until sundown. As the sun began sinking behind the mountains the disks lost some of their color, but after the upper edge of the sun disappeared the fragments of the disks were still visible, though as irregular light blue blotches. In a short time they faded away entirely.

Senator Foraker and his friends have again notified the administration that they are in no hurry to get out of the trouble zone.

GLOBE CONSOLIDATED.

All efforts at the Gem shaft of the Globe Consolidated are now concentrated in sinking and the shaft has reached the depth of 775 feet. There has been no change in the formation and none is expected until the shaft is at least 200 feet deeper, although there would be no surprise if one of the many veins known to traverse Buffalo Hill were encountered at any time, as it is all practically unexplored territory. The crosscuts on the 500 level, on which work was discontinued, have been sealed with concrete dunn. The Globe-Boston shaft is now 661 feet deep in diorite.
